On Converſation.

Bawdy barefac'd, that poor Pretence to Wit.
Eſſay on Poetry.

MY Friend Atticus had long ſolici ed me to ſpend a Day or two at his Country-Seat; and ſending me word the Week paſt, that his Coach was ordered to Town for that Purpoſe, I comply'd with his Importunities and my own Inclinations. His Seat is upon the Foreſt, in a healthful ſharp Air; as he found to his Coſt, tho' not in the leaſt to his Diſſatisfaction, being as well pleas'd to ſee, as I to find the ſubſtantial good Effects. Good Eating and moderate Drinking are the agreeable Tokens of Welcome, wherever the Friend and the Man of true Good Senſe intermixes: And he muſt have been ſomewhat worſe than I am willing to think myſelf, who could there find fault with either. Whether by Accident or Deſign, I know not; but the Ladies were left in Town. But to my invincible Affliction was it; for when I arriv'd at the Place, I found their Rooms ſcurvily ſupply'd by a Set of Things, who indeed call'd themſelves Men, but who rather ſeem'd to have met on Purpoſe to vindicate the Fair Sex from the common Cenſure of Poverty of Converſation; or at leaſt to evince, that the Male Part of the World can, on Occaſion, furniſh out a Meſs of weaker Diſcourſe than the Weakeſt of the other. Atticus is a Perſon of a free and hoſpitable Spirit, and conſequently very ſolicitous to receive every one, that comes to his Houſe under the Name of Acquaintance or Friend, ſuitable to his own Character. The firſt Evening after our Arrival was ſpent upon ſuch indifferent Topicks, as Newneſs and Variety of Faces cuſtomarily produces: For, even among the politer Part, few of the Engliſh Nation are endu'd with the French or Scotch Felicity of Aſſurance; I mean, the Pleaſure of talking with one another at firſt Interview, as if they had been acquainted all the Days of their Lives. I remember to have read this ſomewhere falſly imputed to my Countrymen, as the Iſſue of Sullenneſs: But I would rather, for the Honour of my Country, attribute it in the general to a prudent Precaution; or, in ſome, to a decent Timidity, or baſhful Care to avoid thereby thoſe frequent Indiſcretions, which an unregarded Riot in Loquacity is very apt to produce. Freedom in Converſation, provided it be conſiſtent with Good Manners, will at all Times, and in all Places be praiſe-worthy: As, on the contrary, whenever it exceeds thoſe Limits, whether in Man or Woman, it proſtitutes the Character, and ſtigmatizes the Culprit with Want of Breeding, if not Folly; and certainly both are his Due, who by a Drury Dialect turns the Houſe of Hoſpitality into a Brothel. It would be in vain to offer in Alleviation, that Mirth is the End of all true Society: For Mirth at the Expence of Modeſty is Madneſs; and affords ſuch a poor and futil Excuſe, as will doubly degenerate the human Pleader into the very Brute. Would not the leaſt conſiderate Part of Mankind deſpiſe, even a Hog, for wallowing, and turning up a Jakes; when he had a Trough full of wholſome Beans before him? The Brute never put his Sagacity that Way to the Queſtion: Tho' Man, his mighty Maſter, calls aloud to him for a ſorry Rivalſhip, whenever his Tongue is employ'd upon the Tail for a Subject of Converſation. But I am ſenſible, I have outran a Preamble; and am anticipating the Uſe of my Relation by ſatirical Effluvia, more proper to enforce the Application. To proceed therefore more coolly, which, generally ſpeaking, is to act more regularly, I paſs on to the ſecond Evening's Converſation; when our walking together round the Gardens, and taking curſory Views of the Country round about us, had render'd us ſomewhat better acquainted; and, as I ſhould have thought, fitted us for a Converſation agreeable to Reaſon, and not at all inconſiſtent with Good Manners. But I was wholly diſappointed in my Expectations: For in lieu of Modeſty and good Taſte, Supper being over, and their Pipes lit, ſuch a Torrent of Laſciviouſneſs and Smut evinc'd the Poverty of their Underſtandings, that Atticus himſelf found it impoſſible, as it was under his own Roof, to ſtem the Current. I aſſiſted him all I could; and, not caring to wrangle with ſuch Spendthrifts of their Time, I now and then, by way of queſtioning the Probability of their Stories; and at other Times by ſerious Airs of Contempt and Slight, endeavour'd to put their loquacious Ribaldries out of Countenance: But all would not do, Nature would have its Courſe, and I was forc'd to leave the Diabetes of their Tongues to the Cure of their warm Beds, and a little ſober Reflection, which I flatter'd myſelf a little Repoſe might procure them. But, to my great Surprize, next Morning I found what I hop'd might have reclaim'd, had a quite contrary Effect; and Reflection, if they had arriv'd at any, had only fitted every one of them for a Repetition. Their Over-night's Repaſt had found an agreeable Foulneſs in their Stomachs, of which, for want of a right Digeſtion, the pernicious Fumes aſcended to the Brain, and polluted the whole Scene of Reaſon. The Senſe whereof, ſo ſoon as I could diſcharge myſelf of the Company, and diſembogue from my Head, if I may ſo ſpeak, the Poiſon my Ears had forcibly imbib'd, threw me into this ſerious Soliloquy upon the Follies and Vanities of Human Kind, that can take ſuch elaborate Pains to act below Character, and proſtitute the Judgment and Underſtanding to a Degree that would make the very Brute, with his Shadow of Reaſon, deride him for thoſe very Excellencies he values himſelf upon ſuperior to the reſt of his Fellow-Creatures. Are theſe, ſaid I, are theſe the Effects of all his boaſted Reaſon? What? To act in a Manner, that would put even Irrationals out of Countenance? Is this the Benefit, are theſe the diſtinguiſhing Prerogatives of Speech aſſign'd us by Heaven as Tokens of our Supremacy over all his Creatures? What? To uſe it not in the Praiſe, but in an open Contempt and Defiance, of its omnipotent Donor? We pity the Unfortunate of our Species who want it: But in return, could he be ſenſible of the vile Uſe it is put to, he would laugh at the poor Incumbents, and bleſs his own Deficience. For if Man is, even to his own Conſcience, to be accountable for every idle Word, what a ſtrange, what a monſtrous Account will he have to make up, who makes his Mouth the vomiting Vulcano of no other than what is moſt idle! With any Man, not deſtitute of Thinking and Reflection, ſuch Converſation muſt be allow'd to be of the moſt dangerous Tendency to Civil Society. It is, if I may be allow'd ſo to ſpeak, a Wrapping up of the Soul in Sulphur, to make it burn the more fiercely; or, in more intelligible Terms, like pouring Oil upon a Body already enflam'd, to extinguiſh thoſe Seeds of Flame, which it brings into the World along with it. But, alas! I fear on this Topick I muſt be forc'd to preclude ſuch Converſationiſts the Gift of Reaſon, to ſecure my own Title to the Tribe of Rationals. Moſt certainly, future Things muſt be allow'd to be the leaſt Part of their Concern or Care, who ſo little know how to make any ſenſible Uſe of the preſent. But, perhaps, with a Fleer upon what they may here call Cyniciſm, ſuch may anſwer, It is apparent, they do make a ſenſible Uſe of the preſent, ſince more than one, if not every one of their Senſes, tells them they are gratify'd in the Action. But, to anſwer this doughty Anſwer, If they will not confeſs themſelves degenerated into ſomewhat below a Brute, which I imagine the worſt of them will be unwilling to aſſent to, let them fairly tell me, whether either Reaſon or Good Senſe concurs with their Behaviour, or whether both are not outrag'd by every like opprobrious Violence upon Nature. For a Teſt of the Matter, ſomewhat more adequate to their Capacities, I would ſet before their Eyes a Cur correcting for Miſdemeanours, either of ſtealing Mutton or ſucking Eggs. If the Creature can evidence Shame, by hanging his Tail, or turning away his Head on Sight of either, does he not ſhow a greater Title to Reaſon, than ſuch as let their Tongues run Riot on Topicks, that all the ſoberer Part of Mankind are aſham'd to hear? If rational Creatures, as we boaſt ourſelves, may be allow'd to dive into the Motives to the Actions of Irrationals, the Shame of the Cur, evidenc'd by his hanging Tail, and ſilly Countenance, muſt proceed either from a Senſe of his Maſter's Diſpleaſure incurr'd by the Action, or an Apprehenſion of Correction again to be repeated on a Repetition of his Fault: Either of which will be ſufficient to inſtruct my fine Set of Converſationiſts, whenever they will give themſelves the like Trouble of entring into themſelves. Not that I would pretend to affix Limits to Converſation, or abſolutely confine Men to what is ſolemn or ſerious: Far be it from me to aſſume ſo much of a Dictator: Let Mirth flow to the Heart's Deſire: but let it then be inoffenſive Mirth; ſuch as neither intrenches upon Good Manners, the Quiet of the Company, or the Reputation of our Neighbours. For let Men pretend to carry it off with the moſt plauſible Colour they pleaſe, a fooliſh Action will ever be a fooliſh Action, and attended with Remorſe. For I am apt to hope, the fooliſheſt Part of Mankind are, early or late, overtaken with, or ſtolen into, an Interval of Reflection. And if ſo, what muſt be the Iſſue of the weakeſt of ſuch Reflections? Would not an almoſt Idiot wipe his Mouth after Hours waſted in Riot and Ribaldry? And Riot it is in every Senſe, whether we reſpect ourſelves or others. For if any one in the Company is diſguſted at it, it not only is a Riot as to him, but upon our own Underſtandings. The Aggreſſors are ſo far from being, as before ſtipulated, inoffenſive in their Diſcourſe, that they commit the higheſt Outrage upon Good Manners, which ought to be avoided in all Converſation, eſpecially in the Preſence of a generous Hoſt, or a hearty Friend. But, perhaps, it may be offer'd, That all Men are not qualified for Converſation; and that to talk by Rule muſt give a Stiffneſs of Diſcourſe, wholly inconſiſtent with the Freedom of Society. But as there is no Man, that ever I met with, that would not take it ill to be excluded the Pale of Reaſon; none can take it amiſs if it be inſiſted upon, that he affirms his Title by the Uſe of it. If the Converſation happen to run upon a Subject above his Capacity, this will naturally lead him to demonſtrate his Reaſon, and his Prudence in that, in being ſilent. By ſo being, he may learn; and in Time, by Attention, become able to make a Pool in Converſation. But if Sir William Temple is in the right, this muſt be a Caſe ſo very particular, that I fear we ſhall be out of all Danger of meeting with many Complainants on that Account. Beſides, Converſation now-a-days is ſo very looſe (I mean not here in Manner but in Matter) that News is almoſt the only Theorem ſtarted; or Politicks the only Problem, that ſucceeds it. However, even both might be ſo manag'd as to be inoffenſive; and, in good Hands, either of them may be wrought to contribute to innocent Mirth; which, in my Opinion, is ſo much an Eſſential to Civil Society, that I will never fail to give my Suffrage for the Expulſion of every Oppoſer.

To the AUTHOR of the WEEKLY REGISTER: Or, UNIVERSAL JOURNAL.

SIR,

IF you'll be ſo kind to inſert the following uſeful and excellent Preſcriptions in your next Paper, you'll very much oblige me, and I doubt not but pleaſe many of your Readers, who am, Sir,

Your humble Servant, O. P.

THE Author of the following excellent Preſcriptions makes them publick on no other Motive, than a generous View of doing Good to Mankind. The high Opinion that he conceives of them, is grounded on repeated Trials, and many Years Experience. Did he think it neceſſary to ſupport their Credit by any other ſolemn and authentick Atteſtations, he could produce Vouchers of unſuſpected Veracity, for their Efficacy and Succeſs. He doubts not, but the Publick will eſteem them moſt valuable Diſcoveries; and hopes, that the Divine Bleſſing will accompany an Obſervance of his Directions in the Uſe of them.

On Falſe Friendſhip.

TWO Friends there were, who did a Journey take,
And by the Way they promiſed each either
Whate'er befel, they never would forſake,
But as two Brothers, live and die together:
Thus wand'ring through the Deſarts here and there,
By Chance they met a large and frightful Bear.

With whom ſurpriz'd, and with a deadly Fear,
One leaves his Friend, and climbeth up a Tree:
The other fell down flat before the Bear,
And ſtops his Breath, ſo ſeeming dead to be.
The Bear ſoon left him, (for his Nature's ſuch,
A breathleſs Body never once to touch.)

The Beaſt b'ing gone, and all the Danger paſt,
The Man got up, and walk'd along his Way:
His Fellow leap'ing from the Tree at laſt,
Aſk'd what the Bear in's Ear did whiſp'ring ſay:
Said he, He bid me evermore take Heed
Of ſuch as you, who's falſe in Time of Need.

It is ſuſpected a Boy he had, whom he chaſtized for running away, and being untoward and neglecting his Buſineſs, did the horrid Deed; for tho' the Maſter of the Family did not ſave any Thing, yet this Boy had removed his Cloaths, and laid them under a Hedge in a Field adjoining, and a Match and Tinder-Box found therein. Ridotto al' Freſco, or New-Tunbridge Wells.

WHENCE comes it that the ſplendid Great,
To Titles born, and awful State,
Thus condeſcend, thus check their Will,
And ſhape to Iſlington their Way,
To mix with thoſe of vulgar Clay?
Aſtronomers your Glaſſes raiſe,
Survey this Meteor's dazling Blaze,
And ſay, Portends it Good or Ill?

Soon as Aurora gilds the Skies,
With brighter Charms the Ladies riſe,
To dart from Beams that ſave or kill:
No Homage at the Toilette paid,
Their thouſand Beauties unſurvey'd,
Sweet Negligence Aſſiſtance lends,
And all the artleſs Graces blends
That form the tempting Diſhabille.

Behold the Walks (a chequer'd Shade)
In all the Pride of Green array'd:
How bright the Sun! the Air how ſtill!
In wild Confuſion there we view,
Red Ribbons group'd with Aprons blue,
Curtſies, Scrapes, Nods, Winks, Smiles and Frowns,
Lords, Milk-maids, Dutcheſſes and Clowns,
All in their various Diſhabille. &c.

FRIDAY, June 15.

Yeſterday a Seſſions of Admiralty was held at the Old Bailey, for the Trial of divers Offences committed on the High Seas, before Sir Henry Penrice, Judge of the ſaid Court, when Capt. Rice Harris was tried for the Murder of Richard Beard, one of his Men, on the Coaſt of Guinea on the 2d of June 1731, by beating him in a barbarous Manner with a Cat-of-Nine-Tails, on his refuſing to go aloft to furl the Sails, on which Account he order'd that he ſhould have no Proviſions allow'd him, ſo that the ſaid Beard fell ſick and died in a few Days, who declar'd that the ſaid Captain was the Cauſe of his Death. It was likewiſe prov'd, that the Priſoner threw ſeveral Buckets of cold Water on the Deceas'd while the Surgeon was letting him Blood to ſave his Life. The Priſoner pleaded in his Defence, that the Deceas'd diſobey'd his Orders, and that he did give him ſome gentle Correction, which no Ways endanger'd his Life; but the Witneſſes he call'd to prove the ſame falling ſhort, and the Evidence for the King being ſtrong, the Jury, after a Trial of about ſeven Hours, brought him in Guilty, and he receiv'd Sentence accordingly to be executed at Execution-Dock, and afterwards hang'd in Chains.

Capt Crouch, accus'd of Pyracy, in running away with a Spaniſh Veſſel, was diſcharg'd.

Mr. Webſter, Mate of a Merchant Ship, in Cuſtody for the Murder of a Cabbin Boy in the River, mov'd to be either bail'd or diſcharg'd; but the Court over-rul'd his Motion, and order'd him to be kept confin'd till the next Admiralty-Seſſion, ſeveral of the Material Witneſſes againſt him being at Sea.

Yeſterday Morning about a Quarter after Nine o'Clock, his Majeſty, the Prince of Wales and the Duke on Horſeback, and the Queen and Princeſſes in their Coaches, attended by a very great Concourſe of the Nobility of both Sexes, Foreign Miniſters and other Perſons of Diſtinction, came into Hyde-Park. The Royal Family rode round the three Regiments of Foot-Guards there drawn up, and enter'd at the Right Wing. His Majeſty rode thro' the ſeveral Ranks, and then placing himſelf in the Front, caus'd the ſaid Regiments to paſs in Review before him. He was pleas'd to expreſs a great Satisfaction at their Appearance and good Order. They afterwards drew up into a hollow Square, and fir'd in Platoons. Soon after One o'Clock the Royal Family retir'd, and ſet out for Richmond and Kew, in order to continue there till this Day three Weeks, at which Time they remove to Hampton-Court for the Seaſon.

Yeſterday an unhappy Accident happen'd in Hyde-Park, to two Perſons driving in a Chaiſe, one of whom, by ſome ſudden Stop, being thrown out, broke two of his Ribs, and the other, a Soldier in Col. Fuller's Company, by the ſame Jirk, had his Bayonet thruſt into him, and died on the Spot.

FOREIGN NEWS.

Vienna, June 3. N. S.

OUR laſt Letters from Warſaw adviſe, that the Imperial, Muſcovite, and Pruſſian Miniſters had again repreſented to the Primate of Poland, in the Names of their reſpective Principals, the fatal Conſequences with which the Election of King Staniſlaus muſt neceſſarily be attended; but that the Primate frankly anſwered them, that King Staniſlaus was his particular Friend, whom of all Men he wiſhed to be King: Whereupon thoſe Miniſters are ſaid to have replied, that King Staniſlaus would never be acknowledged by the Emperor, the Czarina, or the King of Pruſſia. Now, whether the Polanders will turn Politicians, or go their own Way in the Choice of a King, Time only can determine; but certain it is, that the Primate's Power is very great in the Proclamation of a King. Prince James Sobieſki, who is a Candidate for the Crown, was arrived at Warſaw. Some ſay, France offers to guaranty the Pragmatick Sanction, provided this Court will not oppoſe King Staniſlaus's Election.

Warſaw, May 30. N. S. Here is much Talk of a Party, that are not only for excluding Foreigners at the enſuing Election, but alſo all ſuch as are of a more exalted Rank than others; and are for chuſing a Polander in æqualitate cum aliis viventem, as they term it, that is, one who does not live better than his Neighbours.

Warſaw, May 30. N. S. The Dyet of Convocation being ended in the ſame tumultuous and confuſed Manner it began, we now hear a great Number of Nuncio's complain, that they were debarred their uſual Freedom in voting, and giving their Advice, and inſtead thereof were forced to take the Oath formerly mentioned. There is a particular Intimacy obſerved between the Primate, who openly eſpouſes the Intereſt of King Staniſlaus, and Count Poniatowſki, Regimentary of the Crown, who with Prince Czartoriſki, has likewiſe declared for the ſame Side of the Queſtion.

Breſlau, May 31. N. S. According to our Advices from Warſaw, the Party favoured by the Primate were exceedingly elate upon their carrying the Oath to exclude all Foreigners in the enſuing Election, which, it is plain, they look upon as the Leading Queſtion.

Duſſeldorp, June 12. N. S. It is hardly to be believed what a Number of fine Horſes the Jockeys of Metz buy up in the Dutchy of Berg, and ſend to France. We reckon a War unavoidable, in caſe King Staniſlaus be choſen King of Poland. The Court of France have demanded a poſitive Anſwer of the Emperor and his Allies, whether they will oppoſe the Election of King Staniſlaus; which ſhews that the French will not content themſelves with bare Threats. The Truth is, all the Places both upon the Upper and Lower Rhine are in a continual Hurry
